

-My Plan for Success-

2-7-17

When I graduate high school, I want to go to UNC or USC (southern California). When/if I get into one of those schools, I will major in sports medicine and minor in psychology. After college, I would want to become a personal trainer at a soccer club. After that gets me started and I have enough money, I would want to create my own company focussing on helping athletes who have been injured/hurt and need to get better. In order to fulfill this plan, I will need to be positive, determined, hard working, professional, engaged, and motivational. Those are also core-values that my workers will need to have so they won't be fired. In order to get to the point where I have my own business, I will need to have a <sup>positive</sup> background history, so at my early jobs, I will be a loyal worker no matter what so I can get a good reputation. So when I eventually open my business, people will think "Oh, ~~that's~~ ~~that's~~ yeah I've heard great things about her." After my business is at a pretty stable place, I'm going to do my part. By then I will have had so many opportunities that I would feel bad for people who don't get to have them. So I will travel to countries in poverty and organize a foundation for kids who want to play sports. I would pay for them to have the right equipment and then pay for them to join a sports team. I would do this because I feel bad for the kids that grew up and didn't get to do what they love. I am lucky because I am able to play sports so I would want other kids to do the same. In order for me to get to the point where I can pay for kids sports, I will need to be pretty successful. So when I first start my own business, I'm not going to give up on it. I will work by my core values. I will do what I have to to get to be successful. I want to earn a lot of money so I can help people. I don't want money for me. I want money so I can start a foundation that helps kids. So, I will have to be ~~some~~ a person that my workers can trust. If people know me as a trustworthy person, I will have a good reputation by the time I'm around 37. This is just the things I want to do and when I'm graduating college, the list will be much more detailed. But I'm only twelve and don't know too much about business, but hopefully this will happen and I will make it happen.
